2008, XII

We forget the land we stand on and live from. We set ourselves free in an economy founded on nothing, on greed verified by fantasy, on which we entirely depend. We depend on fire that consumes the world without lighting it. To this dark blaze driving the inert metal of our most high desire we offer our land as fuel, thus offering ourselves at last to be burned. This is our riddle to which the answer is a life that none of us has lived.

By Wendell Berry
